Case study: A's story

Rural & Urban Training Scheme

Rural & Urban Training Scheme deliver CashBack Academies in East Lothian. It is a diversionary vocational training and education project for young people 12+ who are at risk of involvement in the justice system.

A is a pupil in East Lothian and attends a youth group in the area, who nominated him to the project. He was displaying violent behaviour and not attending school, which was affecting his relationships and leading to substance use. He has low literacy and numeracy levels, and had no qualifications from school.

A was initially easily distracted, but soon developed a rapport with the team. Over time, he was able to follow tasks and engage with peers positively when focused on specific, meaningful tasks like removing motorbike engines.

A's has re-engaged with school and built stronger relationships with school staff and peers. He also achieved project awards in motorbikes, mountain bikes and boxing.

Case study: Alasdair's story

Youth Scotland

Generation CashBack is run by Youth Scotland, Scouts Scotland, Girlguiding Scotland and the Boys' Brigade. The project supports disadvantaged young people in East Lothian and across Scotland to benefit from community-based youth work.

Alasdair (20) is part of the Destiny Project, a youth group based in Prestonpans. They nominated Alasdair for leadership and youth worker training opportunities with Generation CashBack.

Before joining the local project, Alasdair struggled with confidence and motivation. After joining, he realised he was not the only young person in his area struggling:

"It's mainly damaging properties, antisocial behaviour. And that, for me, is like, okay, so why is there no enough help for these guys?"

Building his youth work and leadership skills has been a turning point for Alasdair, and he has gained SCQF qualifications.

He shared of his first time delivering an activity:

"I wanted to teach the other guys that I had in my group... because I knew I could see that they were scared as well.

I never thought it was even possible for a guy like me to actually have these moments in life."
