YDance (Scottish Youth Dance)

CashBack on Track uses dance to support the wellbeing and development of young people across Scotland, helping them build resilience and lead fulfilling lives through four targeted strands.

E was referred to the Good Shepherd Centre after experiencing multiple Adverse Childhood Experiences and displaying high-risk behaviours.

Initially shy and withdrawn, E began attending weekly YDance sessions, where she slowly built trust with the dance tutor and explored different styles. A turning point came when she co-choreographed a contemporary routine and performed it confidently, boosting her self-esteem. She is now developing a jump-style routine for the school festival and has shown strong commitment and creativity.

“The young person has gained so much confidence, skills and is now willing to teach other young people and staff.” – Teacher

E has earned a Personal Achievement Award and is working toward a Dance Leadership Award. Her performances have contributed to her National 3 PE qualification. The programme has helped her build resilience, teamwork, and leadership skills, and reignited her dream of becoming a ballet dancer.

The National Autistic Society (NAS)

NAS's Moving Forward+ supports young people in Renfrewshire. It is a project for autistic young people aged 10-15 who are not engaging with school, or those aged 16-25 who are not in education, employment, or training.

15-year-old E joined the project "because I wanted to get the necessary qualifications, build my confidence in meeting new people, and also be able to go into school without being anxious like I normally would be."

Through one-to-one coaching and group work, Moving Forward+ supports participants to build confidence and develop strategies to improve their resilience and mental health.

"I used to feel nervous about people looking at me but now I'd like to say that I've opened up more and I'm making decisions by myself."

E says that "I don't remember exactly when I started out, but it was a bit after when I returned to school for half an hour lessons." She achieved her goal of gaining qualifications, and continues to set herself new goals for the future.
