Phase 6

Forewords

Martin Fraser

UpStream Counselling & Families Manager

As we come to the end of this three-year phase of UpStream, this feels like an important opportunity to reflect on both the final year of the project and the wider development of the project as a whole. It has been a full and significant period, with growing demand and many opportunities to support young people and families across the East End and wider city.

When Bethany UpStream Communities with CashBack began, there was a clear need for more accessible community-based mental health and wellbeing support for young people locally. Over the past three years, a large number of young people have accessed support through the project, often during very difficult periods in their lives. It has been a privilege to be trusted by so many young people and families in this way.

Throughout the project we have seen the importance of accessible, relationship-based support within the community, and the difference this can make when young people feel listened to, understood, and supported consistently.

I would like to thank our staff team, volunteers, partners, and funders for their support over the last three years, and most importantly the young people and families who have engaged with UpStream and allowed us to play a part in their lives.

Paul Stevenson

Director of Homelessness Prevention

We are very thankful to CashBack for Communities for their continued support over the last three years. Every year we see an ongoing need for our youth counselling service. A need that can only be met sustainably with multi-year funding.

In addition to this, the support of a generous benefactor meant that wait times for young people wishing to engage with us could be reduced. Going forward, we are incredibly thankful to CashBack for choosing to support our work for a further three years.

It is a privilege to work with young people, and we are encouraged that CashBack acknowledge the difference that the work of UpStream is making in the lives of so many young people. Thank you!

UpStream Counselling with CashBack for Communities

CashBack for Communities is a Scottish Government programme that reinvests criminal assets recovered through the Proceeds of Crime Act (POCA) into projects that provide positive futures for young people.

Established in 2008, the fund has invested £ 156 million, helping 1.4 million young people across Scotland.

Phase 6 of CashBack for Communities has run from 1 April 2023 to 31 March 2026. It has supported a range of trauma-informed and person-centred services and activities for young people between the ages of 10–25 years old via 29 CashBack Partner Organisations that aim to:

- Support young people most at risk of being involved in antisocial behaviour, offending or reoffending towards or into positive destinations
- Provide person-centred support for young people, parents and families impacted by Adverse Childhood Experiences and trauma
- Support young people to improve their health, mental health and wellbeing
- Support people, families and communities most affected by crime

UpStream Communities Counselling Service has partnered with CashBack for Communities since April 2023. Our service offers free and accessible counselling, wellbeing support and clinical psychology for young people aged 10–25 years old who are experiencing distress, feel isolated, or may be involved in offending behaviour.

Our highly trained staff and partners provide a confidential space for young people to process what is going on in their lives. Support is individually tailored and can include one-to-one, group, or family therapeutic interventions.

This vital funding has enabled us to meet the needs of children and young people and lower the risk of homelessness for vulnerable young people and their families in Glasgow over the past three years.

We are delighted to be recipients of Phase 7 CashBack funding (2026–2029), and we look forward to continuing our partnership with Inspiring Scotland to create more lasting positive impacts for children, young people and their families.

“Without UpStream I wouldn’t be here. It’s heavy to admit but it’s the truth.”

Our Story & Mission

Bethany Christian Trust

02

Bethany Christian Trust is a national charity dedicated to ending homelessness in Scotland, one person at a time.

Our Mission

Our mission is to relieve the suffering and meet the long-term needs of homeless and vulnerable people in Scotland. We do this through partnering with communities, churches, organisations, local and national government, offering tailored support and services.

Our Beginnings

We were founded in 1983 by a Baptist minister, Alan Berry and his wife, Anne, in response to the homelessness they witnessed in their local area of Leith, Edinburgh. They started with Bethany Christian Centre, a residential unit designed to offer care and support to 28 men and women without a home. From these small beginnings, Bethany Christian Trust has grown to support around 7,000 people who are homeless or at risk of becoming homeless, across Scotland each year.

Our Services

As our services have developed, so too has our community of supporters, partners, volunteers and staff, all committed to loving and serving those in need in Scotland. Over the past 40 years, Bethany's work has grown to include over 30 services, 200 staff and almost 3,000 volunteers.

We work within three core streams of support designed to meet people's needs and break the cycles of poverty and addiction that often lead to homelessness:

- Homelessness Prevention
- Crisis Intervention
- Housing and Support

There are many routes into homelessness, so we need more than one response. Often, people have complex needs and require different types of support to overcome the challenges they face in life. We aim to walk alongside individuals at every step of their journey, helping people to live fulfilled lives, resilient to the threat of homelessness.

Our Values

We seek to put Christian love into action and demonstrate the transforming impact of the Gospel in all that we do.

- Love is our standard
- We serve others
- We value the whole person

Our Service

UpStream Communities with CashBack

Bethany UpStream with CashBack for Communities is a community-based, youth-centred and trauma-informed project providing counselling and mental health support for young people aged 10–25 in Glasgow’s East End. We work with young people facing a wide range of mental health and emotional wellbeing challenges, including anxiety, trauma, low mood, emotional distress, and difficulty attending school. Some are at risk of, or already involved in, antisocial or offending behaviour.

The project supports young people to build emotional resilience and coping skills, using early support and intervention to help create lasting, positive change and reduce the risk of harm, offending, and homelessness later in life.

“There comes a point where we need to stop just pulling people out of the river. We need to go UpStream and find out why they’re falling in”

– Archbishop Desmond Tutu

The service is free, accessible, flexible, and centred on the needs of each young person. We support young people who face barriers to accessing help, and we work closely alongside statutory services such as social work, child and adolescent mental health services, and general practice, as well as schools and community partners. Young people are referred by schools, families, and partner organisations.

The project is delivered year-round, and young people can access one-to-one counselling, wellbeing groups, family support, and tailored therapeutic support based on their needs. The team includes counsellors, therapists, a clinical psychologist, and a community and families link worker. Our link worker helps young people connect with further support, education, training, volunteering, and other local services.

Our service has been designed to work in partnership with the vital services provided by CAMHS and the NHS. Its design and provision align with the Scottish Government Mental Health Strategy 2017–27 aims of:

1. Prevention and early intervention
2. Access to treatment and joined up accessible services
3. The physical wellbeing of people with mental health problems
4. Rights, information use and planning

We work alongside a wide range of local partners to provide consistent, joined-up support that helps young people move forward and sustain positive change.

Reflections on Phase 6

2023-2026

Over the course of Phase 6, Bethany UpStream Communities with CashBack has continued to develop into a trusted and established source of support for young people and families across the East End and wider city. It was clear from the start that demand would be high, and throughout the three-year phase, referrals continued to grow alongside stronger relationships with statutory services and community partners. As the project became more established and increasingly recognised as a trusted point of contact for support, we developed a deeper understanding of the complex challenges many young people and families were experiencing.

This insight often emerged through our initial assessment meetings, which became an important early point of connection and support for young people and their families.

A significant area of learning throughout this phase was the importance of remaining flexible and responsive to individual needs. The team worked across a wide age range and adapted approaches accordingly, from play-based and creative therapy with younger children to more psychologically informed interventions with older young people. This was complemented by group work, family meetings, advocacy, and, where needed, coordinating wider services and support.

Across the project, we adapted our work to better support neurodivergent young people by listening carefully to feedback and learning how to make support more flexible and appropriate to individual needs. We also continually reflected on how we communicate as a service, seeking to engage young people in ways that felt more accessible and inclusive.

Throughout the phase, it became increasingly clear how important it was for the service to remain community-based, welcoming, and flexible. The wide range of skills and therapeutic approaches within “I’ve got methods now.

I’m not losing my temper so easily.”

– Young Person from UpStream Counselling

the team meant support could be adapted to meet a wide range of needs– from brief focused interventions and signposting to longer-term therapeutic support and wider family work. This often involved identifying needs that may otherwise have gone unnoticed and helping young people and families navigate wider systems and services. The impact of the work was often felt beyond the individual young person, positively influencing family relationships, home life, and wider support networks.

The project also worked within communities affected by trauma, violence, loss, and community grief, and this formed an important backdrop to much of the work undertaken.

While there were many examples of positive outcomes and meaningful progress, there were also ongoing challenges. Collecting evaluation and feedback data consistently remained difficult, particularly where young people disengaged from support or where circumstances were more complex. However, the feedback and outcome data we were able to gather suggested the project was meeting, and in several areas exceeding, its intended outcomes. In many cases, UpStream became the start of a longer journey of support and recovery for young people and families. At other times, there were young people whose needs remained difficult to meet, or who disengaged before support could fully develop. This continues to reflect the realities and complexities of community-based mental health work.

The last three years have brought a significant amount of learning for both the project and team, and we are grateful to have played a part in supporting so many young people and families during that time. As we move into Phase 7, we look forward to building on this experience, continuing to develop the service, and continuing the work alongside the young people and communities we support.

Case Study

Jamie's story*

Jamie engaged with UpStream over a sustained period, allowing a strong therapeutic relationship to develop. Much of the work focused on trust, belonging, emotional wellbeing, relationships, and anxiety. Support remained flexible throughout, adapting to Jamie's changing circumstances and needs.

During his time with the project, Jamie experienced a significant loss which had a major impact on his wellbeing and affected many areas of his life. This period brought additional challenges and setbacks, including concerns around risk-taking behaviour. Much of the work during this time focused on helping him understand and manage difficult emotions, process experiences of loss, and strengthen the coping strategies available to him. This support also helped Jamie reflect on choices and behaviours, and consider the kind of future he wanted for himself.

Alongside these challenges, there were encouraging signs of progress. Earlier in the work, one of Jamie's goals had been to better understand and express his emotions. Over time, he became increasingly able to identify different emotional responses, reflect on what they might be telling him, and communicate these more openly with others. He also began thinking more positively about his future, exploring opportunities around employment and greater independence.

Jamie's story highlights the importance of consistent, flexible support for young people who have experienced instability, loss, and significant life challenges.

It also demonstrates how progress often happens gradually, with trusted relationships providing the space for young people to better understand themselves and move forward with greater confidence in the future.

The Children's Rights and Wellbeing Impact Assessment serves to protect the children and young people who use our services, or come into contact with the organisation, from harm.

Bethany believes that everyone has a right to feel safe and protected from any situation or practice which results in anyone being physically or psychologically harmed. This policy outlines how Bethany strives to achieve this with reference to its duties and responsibilities from legislation and guidance, in particular the Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2014 towards children (including unborn children) who come into contact with the organisation. Harm could be perpetrated by family, friends, carers or workers and could be physical, emotional, sexual or neglect.

Bethany strives to adhere to the principles on the Rights of Child as laid out in the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) and in particular that every child has the right to protection from all forms of abuse, neglect or exploitation.

"I don't think I would have been able to cope with life; I probably would have spiralled. I wouldn't have been able to deal with general life.

It's helped more than I could say."
– Young Person from UpStream Counselling

Reflections

from our Partner Clinical Psychologist,
Kate Black

Over the past three years, one of the most positive aspects of the UpStream project has been its ability to establish a broad range of partnerships with other agencies. This has enabled a large number of services to signpost and refer young people and families for support, helping the project reach individuals who may otherwise have struggled to access help. The self-referral process has also been a significant strength, empowering young people and families to seek support at the time they feel ready, while still offering practical assistance from staff where needed. This flexibility has often resulted in high levels of motivation and engagement from those accessing the service.

A particular strength of the project has been its ability to support young people who often experience barriers to accessing more traditional services, including those who are care experienced, homeless, applying for refugee status, or involved in the justice system. The development of more holistic support around the counselling provision has also been highly valuable. The expansion of link worker and family support roles has enabled practical and advocacy-based support for families alongside therapeutic intervention. In many cases, this has helped create a safer and less crisis-driven context in which one-to-one therapeutic work could take place more effectively.

It has also been encouraging to see the positive impact of collaborative working in cases where there has been ongoing involvement with schools, social work, and other agencies. This has often helped create greater consistency around the young person and supported opportunities beyond the therapy room, including access to education, training, and increased understanding of a young person's needs within school settings. The assessment process itself has also been experienced positively by many families, with a number reporting that the initial appointment helped them feel hopeful, understood, and less alone.

Alongside these strengths, the project has highlighted important learning over the course of the funding period. Demand for the service has consistently outweighed capacity, reflecting the significant level of unmet need among young people and families. A growing area of referral has involved younger children awaiting neurodevelopmental assessment, often presenting with behavioural difficulties linked to aspects of neurodivergence that are not yet fully understood or supported. Many of these young people and their families experience high levels of distress and stress while navigating long waiting periods for assessment and support.

This has reinforced the importance of multi-agency approaches for neurodivergent young people and their families, involving coordinated psychoeducation, parenting support, school-based intervention, and individual support. While UpStream has been able to offer meaningful support in many of these situations, the experience of the project suggests that there is value in ensuring services such as UpStream are included within wider planning and provision for young people awaiting neurodevelopmental assessment and support.

Finally, the project's open approach to re-referrals has been experienced as a positive and flexible aspect of the model. Young people and families have been able to end support knowing they can return in the future if needed, which can make endings feel less daunting and allow individuals to access support again at points when they feel more ready or able to engage.

Working Together

Alignment with Government Policies

Best Start, Bright Futures

states that “We must ensure a coordinated approach to services which wrap around families – providing the right support to the right people at the right time.”

Bethany UpStream Communities meets this aim in its hub-style provision of individual counselling, therapeutic group sessions, family support sessions, skills workshops and volunteering and training referrals all as part of one service.

Our Community Link Worker builds trusted relationships encouraging families to access the support that they need and are entitled to, as well as making use of community assets so that the necessary connections are made to address the causes and impact of child poverty in communities. UpStream with the help of CashBack for Communities contributes towards improved school attendance rates, positive destinations and helps to prevent young people becoming parents in poverty, by enhancing their wellbeing and access to support services.

The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC)

are embodied in the design and delivery of our UpStream service. All of the staff delivering this project have completed the relevant training related to this. We review our CRWIA annually in relation to our Child Protection Policy which explicitly mentions how Bethany Christian Trust strives to adhere to the principles on the Rights of Child as laid out in the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) and in particular that every child has the right to protection from all forms of abuse, neglect or exploitation. This policy is reviewed every 18 months by the Chief Executive and Director of Homelessness Prevention.

Vision for Justice in Scotland states that to prevent people coming into contact with the justice service we need to tackle the longstanding societal issues which exist beyond the boundaries of the justice system. Arrivals to prison are disproportionately from the most deprived areas. The people most likely to be in contact with the justice system experience high levels of mental health problems and need to be treated with dignity and respect.

With the help of CashBack for Communities, we have been able to collaborate with 48 local and national referral agencies to deliver a service that is free and geographically accessible to young people with wide ranging needs in the top 10% deprived areas of Glasgow.

Our trauma informed practice, rights based and collaborative approach draws on the experience and knowledge of our third sector partners. Young people referred to us often have no recourse to early intervention like youth counselling or therapy because of challenges including stigma, school refusal and statutory waiting times. In addition, families are supported by our experienced Link Worker to engage in local facilities and social networks to live well so that future generations will thrive. UpStream recognise that approaches need to reach beyond the school gates to mitigate the barriers to learning caused by poverty and to enter into and sustain positive destinations to break the cycle of poverty.

“The groups I’ve been part of, the therapy...
I’ve just been grateful I guess, for the support and really honoured to be in such a safe space and be open-minded about the stuff I’ve been through as well.”

- Young Person from UpStream Counselling

Scotland's 2018–2032 Climate Change Plan

is something that Bethany Christian Trust is committed to and we are working to minimise our environmental footprint while delivering quality services. We recognise the importance of environmental stewardship, and are committed to minimising the environmental impact of our activities and promoting sustainability in all aspects of our work. As an organisation, we have created a robust Environmental and Sustainability Policy which demonstrates our commitment to reducing emissions, optimising energy use, prioritising biodegradable and recycled products, minimising waste, and endorsing sustainable use of materials.

We have the following actions in place within the delivery of UpStream Counselling with the support of CashBack for Communities to support Scotland's Climate Change Plan.

1. Electricity

We are committed to reducing our energy consumption, working towards the facilities we operate from being fitted with energy-efficient lighting and appliances. We regularly monitor our energy and water usage to facilitate constant efficiency optimisation. Energy-saving practices are encouraged among staff and the people using our service.

2. Transport

We endeavour to reduce emissions through the thoughtful planning of our service delivery. We schedule our work to minimise vehicle usage and encourage public transportation, cycling and carpooling amongst our staff.

3. Waste and the Circular Economy

Our sustainable procurement policy prioritises environmentally-friendly products and promotes the use of recycled materials. We implement efficient waste disposal, including recycling and we also promote a paperless office culture, leveraging digital platforms where possible for our administrative needs. We promote reuse of unwanted items, diverting items from landfill by not always buying new. Wherever possible, we opt for sustainable and ethically sourced materials. This includes office supplies, furniture, and other resources necessary for service delivery. We also aim to source locally, reducing the carbon footprint associated with transportation.

As an organisation, we value education and awareness, seeking to foster environmental consciousness among our staff, volunteers, and the people using the UpStream service. Regular communication, training resources, and engagement in sustainable practices are key components of our strategy. Continuous improvement is central to our environmental policy.

This involves setting and reviewing environmental targets, conducting annual environmental audits, encouraging stakeholder feedback, and benchmarking our performance against industry standards. Through these efforts, we will continuously refine our practices, ensuring alignment with evolving local and national environmental goals. Our commitment to the environment is unwavering, and we strive to uphold this through our services. We understand the importance of our role in promoting a more sustainable future, and we are fully dedicated to fulfilling this responsibility.
